These would be contributions the people of this tion to the price of gold, and country have not taken into will be retired from circulation account fully. Mr. Andrews said that he had observed in an interview which Perry Belmont gave out upon his arrival from England the other day, that Belmont suggested that in case France should agree to international bimetallism it would be with the agreement that she should receive some tariff concessions from the United States. Mr. Andrews thought it probable that in the conference France might make some such demand as this. It was natural for each nation to drive as sharp a bargain as possible in the deal. In answer to a question as to what in his opinion the outcome of a conference would be Mr. Andrews said:

I can hardly answer that question in so general a form. The holding of a conference might be used by the gold republicans merely as a means of putting off action upon bimet allism until the next presidential election. Then they could go before the people and say in There should be no rush delay in the minds of men at ing of an international bime;allearned while abroad, I know In the first place there is England and France would folreally no need of a conference in order to establish or re-establish the value of silver in the commercial world. "Instend of there being danbood that it will go up, in rela on account of its greater value. If these reports of the finding of gold in Alaska are all that they now appear to be, this may occur. The natural value of silver as compared to gold is about 15 or 16 to 1, because that is about the proportion in which the two metals are mined. But the amount of silver taken out of the mines in proportion to the amount of gold is steadiactually increasing in value, sion that he was going as an ity of the mint will permit. And all that stands in the way nothing but legislation."
